A RYERSON UNIVERSITY NEWSLETTER PRODUCED BY THE LIBRARY

ISSUE NO. 17/APRIL 2006

LIBRARY Space Survey Says...

The Library recently conducted two surveys to gain feedback from our users to help us as we move forward with our multi-year space planning. The first survey was conducted in April 2005, followed by an additional survey in October 2005.

A snapshot of the results from October 2005:

The survey results re-affirm how critical the library is to our users. For the majority of the respondents, the Library is vital to their academic success. They visit the Library for a variety of reasons: to study (either alone or in a group); borrow library materials; use the computers to complete their assignments; and request staff assistance while on-site. The most consistent comments were of the crowded conditions, and the need for more library space. As we move forward with our library space planning initiatives, the feedback of our users will be critical to ensuring the development of a plan that meets their needs first and foremost. Continued on page 2

Survey Results

- 📖 The majority of respondents were undergraduates.
- 📖 They frequented the Library three or more times per week, stayed between two-four hours, and primarily came to study alone or use the computers in the Information and Learning Commons.
- 📖 When asked how to improve the Library, there was little consensus – quiet study areas, longer hours, better book collections and e-resources were all recurring choices.

The Library recently acquired the 1st floor of the Library Building, which was previously occupied by the School of Social Work. A committee of library staff met to determine what to do with this new space, and how it could be changed to better meet users' needs. Given that the library elevators cannot connect to the 1st floor, the new space was not viable as a place where patrons would need access, nor does it have the load-bearing capabilities needed to house collections.

As reflected in the results of the library survey, one of the recurring requests made by our students is for more group study space. The Library currently has study rooms that students can book online to facilitate group work; however, the demand for group study space during the academic term is quite high. In order to open up additional space in the Library for group study, the Committee recommended that the 1st floor be used as a staff work area. Given that the space is approximately the same size as Cataloguing and Technical Services, which previously occupied part of the 5th floor, the Committee determined that the space on the 1st floor, if renovated appropriately, could accommodate many of the activities of the Collections Team – Cataloguing and Technical Services, Acquisitions, and Donations – as well as providing office space for the librarians affiliated with the Team.

Construction began in November, with staff relocating to the renovated 1st floor in December. The vacated space on the 5th floor has allowed for a redevelopment of the whole floor, adding more space to the public area. The print periodical collection has remained on the 5th floor, and the Serials Office has been moved to the west side of the floor, with a service counter that is staffed during business hours. The vacated Serials Office has been converted to a study room equipped with about 26 carrels.

Due to a number of librarians relocating to the 1st floor, their current offices becoming vacant, and librarians shifting to other office locations, the vacated offices have been converted to group study rooms. This has resulted in 10 new group study rooms becoming available for student booking in early 2006.

What Does the Future Library Look Like?

The Library hosted faculty, student representatives and members of the university administration at a breakfast and planning session in the fall of 2005. The keynote speaker, Scott Bennett, Librarian Emeritus from Yale University and Principal at Library Space Planning – www.libraryspaceplanning.com – gave an engaging presentation on how academic libraries across North America are rethinking the library as “place”, and renovating and reconfiguring their space to meet the changing needs of students and faculty. Faculty and administration were asked to discuss what they would like to see in a future Ryerson Library, in terms of space, services offered and possible collaborations with other university departments. The discussions and ideas offered at this breakfast will help provide the basis for future space planning initiatives. There will be ongoing opportunities for community and stakeholder consultation on the future of the Library as additional space and funding becomes available. Kodak Canada has donated its entire historic company archives to Ryerson University. The Kodak Archives, which begin in 1909, contain historic photos, files, trade circulars, Kodak magazines, price lists, daily record books, cameras, equipment and other ephemera. The print and photograph collection is currently being processed in the Library with assistance from graduate students in Photographic Preservation and Collections Management. The Library has also acquired an extensive collection of materials on the history of photography from the private collection of Nicholas M. and Marilyn A. Graver of Rochester, New York. The Graver collection, built up over many years, consists of over 1,000 books, periodicals, catalogues and other similar material related to the history of photography.

The Ryerson University Library has recently received a donation of the personal audio-visual archives (over 1,000 video and audio tapes) of Dr. Joe MacInnis, noted author and one of the world's leading underwater explorers and photographers. This collection contains footage of his major underwater expeditions, including dives to the Titanic, as well as interviews with and lectures by Dr. MacInnis detailing his experiences in deep-sea exploration. In an effort to provide appropriate learning opportunities for graduate students in Photographic Preservation and Collections Management, the library has employed more than nine graduate students to work on these three special collections.
